DR. DOLLINGER.

Address of the Professors of Munich University to the Excommunicated Theologian-Papal Infallibility Strongly Denounced.

The case of Dr. Dollinger continues to attract great interest. Dr. Dollinger receives the support of the Bavarian Minister of Worship, and the greater number of the Catholic professors of the Munich University-forty-four out of sixtytwo-have presented the following address to

In accordance with the other high schools of Germany we protested, eight months ago, against the resolutions which the Pope and the majority of the so-called (Ecumenical Council attempted to force upon Catholic Christianity on July 18, last year. Since then the work of force inaugurated in Rome has been continued, and at a time when the German nation conquered on the battle-fields the first place among the nations of the globe, the bisheps of the German nation assumed the task of oppressing the consciences. In the service of unchristian tyranny they have brought confusion and distress into many honest hearts. Their object is to persecute the firm believers of their faith and to euchain us all as much as it is in their power in the irons of absolutism, which is meant to replace the functions of reason and right, the traditions and Holy Scriptures. Whither will this begin-ning lead? What will become of the Catholic world and the Fatherland when it is no longer permitted within the pale of the Church to unite scientific culture (Beldung), sincerity of heart, and liberty of conscience with religiousness? In these times of danger, when all exterior pillars of support are breaking, it behoves the high schools to cling to the last and, with God's help, unbreakable plank of outraged truth. Upon you, above all, reverend sir, have the eyes of the nation been directed. You have fulfilled the general expectation; by your declara-tion of March 28 you have given a pledge of the salutary development; you have upheld the right of free scientific examination and inserted page of the highest historical importance in the annals of the Munich University. You had to decide between a humiliating submission, without regard to right and truth, as demanded of you, and a difficult but indispensable duty, and you have chosen the right path. Persevere in the struggle, reverend sir. Defend yourself with the shining shield of science, and may it be a shield of destruction to all those who corrupt Christianity. At this crisis of our Christian destinies we remember the question of the coura-geous Gratry, "Is God in need of your lie?" (bedarf Gott eurer Luge?), and we and thousands of true hearts with us answer like you, reve-rend sir, with a clear and decided "No!"

LEAP FOR LIBERTY.

Daring Attempted Escape of a Thief-He is Shot Twice Before He Surrenders. The Albany Evening Jonrnal of Saturday

About 11 o'clock this morning an affair took place in the vicinity of the corner of Jefferson street and Delaware turnpike, which caused a tremendous excitement for a time. The facts are substantially as follows:—Officer Frank Weis, of the Police Court squad, armed with a bench warrant, went to arrest Charles Keefe, a well-known and desperate character, and an ex-convict, on a charge of grand larceny. The officer proceeded to the residence of Keefe, No. 2 Delaware turnpike, but the latter seeing him come, sprang out of a second-story in the rear on a shed, and springing from thence to the ground, made his way out in Jefferson street. Weis dropped on his little game, however, and started for the corner of Jefferson, reaching it insteas the follow emerged, from a variant ran just as the fellow emerged from a yard and ran rapidly down the street.

The officer called to him to halt, threatening to shoot him if he did not. This had no effect in decreasing the fugitive's speed, however, and Weis, pulling out his revolver, snapped it, but from some cause it would not go off. The chase was continued down Jefferson street to Dove, through Dove, up Elm, round and down Jefferson again in the same track, until at last the fugitive ran into a house on the Delaware turnpike, a short distance from Jefferson street. Officer Van Buren was attracted to the scene by this time, and took up a position in front of the house, while Weis passed round to the yard in the rear, intending to close in on and capture him if possible without bloodshed.

Wels no sooner reached the yard than he beheld his man coming out of the back door, and called to him to halt. Keefe ran into the house again, and Weis after him. Before the officer could seize him, however, he made a desperate rush, sprang out of the front door past Van Buren, and started over towards Madison avenue, at a high rate of speed. Buren called to him to halt several times, he still kept on, when the officer, fearing he would escape, fired two shots after him, both taking effect in the fleshy part of the right leg. He continued to run for a distance of thirty or forty feet after receiving the wounds before He lay so still and motionless after falling that it was at first believed he was killed, but he soon came to, and was taken in charge by the officers, who conveyed him to the Police Court, when he was committed to jail.

ROUMANIA.

Persecution of Israelites in that Country. Mr. B. F. Peixotto, of California, the recently appointed United States Consul at Bucharest, sends to the Jewish Messenger the conclusions reached after two mouths' stay in Roumania, with regard to the persecution of his brother Israelites in that country. He states that the persecution, of whose details somewhat exaggerpersecution of whose details somewhat exagger-rated accounts were transmitted several months ago, still continues; that it is systematic, and is fostered by trade jealousies and the political chicanery of demagogues, who take this cheap method of obtaining popularity. The new Constitution declares that no Israelite can become a chilzen; and a still later project introduced into the popular Assembly aims at excluding all Jews from obtaining contracts for public works, from residing anywhere but in the towns, and from coloying the benefits of education in their own faith. Mr. Peixotto has learned enough since his arrival to make him "dread to know more."

CHLOROFORM AND THE ROPE.

Suicide of a Cousin of General Joe Hooker. The St. Louis Times of April 19 says: — About 10 o'clock yesterday morning one of the waiters at the Plauters' House observed a man waiters at the Planters' House observed a man apparently occupying a cramped and distorted position in one of the third story windows of the building on the northwest corner of Pine and Fourth streets. The man's peculiar posture aroused the curiosity of the waiter, who called to the porter of the building opposite to go and see what was the matter. Upon opening the door of room No. 8 it was found that the occupant had committed suicide, having deliberately hung himself. hung himself.

A PREMEDITATED ACT.

The police were at once notified, and the door barred to intruders, so that when our reporter arrived all was just as when first discovered. The dead man and his surroundings formed a scene not soon to be forgotten. The bed was undisturbed, and the appointments of the room just as the chambermaid had left them. In the window casing, about seven feet from the floor, was a stout iron staple. To this had been at-tached an inch trunk strap, the loose end of which had been made into a noose and placed about his neck.

The man was leaning forward, one hand rest-ing on the window sill, and his feet, with the knee bent, resting easily upon the floor. There was a quiet look of repose upon his features, and the whole position of the body showed that there was no tension of the muscles. He had dressed bimself with care, having put on a clean shirt and stockings, a pair of pants and a vest. His hair was also neatly combed. A handker-chief was placed about his neck, so that the strain upon the strap might not cause it to cut into the flesh. WHO HE WAS. The official investigation made by the coroner brought to light the principal facts of the man's history. His name is J. Walcott Hooker. Upon his person were found Masonic badges and papers, indicating he had taken the thirty-third degree in Masonry. He had also three insur-ance policies upon his life, the first payments of which were made in 1866. One was for $1000, in the Connecticut Mutual, and was taken out May 14, 1866, in favor of his wife. The second was for $2000, in the New York Mutual, and the third for $3000, in the same company, both in fayor of Belle Hooker, his daughter, and showed that he was forty-three years of age.

Numerous conjectures were indulged in by the few admitted to the room as to how the deed was committed. The composure of the features and the absence of all signs of a struggle lead many to suppose that the death was not simply the result of strangulation. It was thought that he had first saturated his handkerchief with chloroform and had died while insensible. The porter states that he had told him he was a cousin of General Joe Hooker.

SINGULAR TRAGEDY.

A Man Murdered at His own Request— Confession of the Murderess.

Some days since we gave an account of the suicide, in a house of bad character, of one Daniel E. Hedden, a cierk in the paymaster's department at Omaha. It now turns out that, at his own request, a girl—Cora Clinton—fired the fatal shot. The following particulars are from the Omaha Heraid of April 18:—

Last night, about 9 o'clock, the woman who in the public mind from her connection with the late awful tragedy in this city, sent for Captain Dutcher, of the police force. He went immediately in answer to the summons, accompanied by Lieutenant Frank Schulter, also of the police Cora at once entered into conversation with the

She told them that she had shot Hedden with her own hand; that she wanted to be taken away from "this place." Captain Dutcher gave he in charge of Lieutenant Shulter, who conducted her to jail. The city editor of this paper then visited the jail. Cora then came out from her cell, and was told that the reporters were present, and that if she had nothing to conceal had better relate the circumstances. She was dressed in plain black, was pale, but did not appear much agitated. Turning to us she said:

—"I confess that I killed him." We asked if she meant Daniel Hedden, and she said, "Yes." She continued:—"He said he had taken laudary man asked me to shoot him. He wanted num and asked me to shoot him. He wanted num and asked me to shoot him. He wanted that I should save his soul from the sin. I thought that the pistol he had was the one he usually carried, and that is a seven-barrelled revolver. I intended to kill myself with the next load. After I saw that there was no other load, then I threw down the pistol and ran out."

Cora is, when properly dressed, as she was last night, a fine-looking woman. Her face is broad and full, and has an intelligent expression. She is capable of heroism. We asked her why she sought to take her own life. She re-plied, "Because I had killed him."

WAR AMONG THE WOMEN.

"If Women Fight They Ought to Have the Right to Vote"-How the Illinois Woman Suffrage Association Divided.

From the Chicago Post. Horace Greeley has been contending for some years that women ought not to be permitted to lay their kands upon that consecrated imple-ment of civilization, the ballot, until they have borne arms. If H. G. had on Tuesday evening happened into a room 20 by 20 in the Reynolds block, where was assembled the executive com-mittee of the Illinois Woman Suffrage Association, his skepticism on the subject of woman's capacity for fighting would have been most effectually extinguished.

In that room, on that occasion, it was demon-strated to the blindest observer that woman can fight—that she can fight like a Bengal tigress—and that the scene of her contentious exploits, when the occasion is woman suffrage, falls little short of Dore's Bedlam. If her right to vote is to be measured by her fighting calibre, most of the women present at No. 82 ought to be per-mitted to cast at least a thousand votes next

Nearly all of the committee—some twenty-five strong—were present. They apparently came well drilled and prepared for the contest—five well drilled and prepared for the contest—five men and twenty women; or, to speak more cor-rectly, twenty women and five men. The cam-paign began over the reading of the minutes, and continued, without cessation, a scene of tumult and angry recrimination till after mid-night, ending in a violent rupture, and a seces-sion of an obvious majority for the formation of a rival society.

And such fun as it was! Cushing's Manual was laughed to scorn. Epithets were freely indulged in. Men and women stood on the floo and contradicted each other in the most ap-proved fashion. An officer was charged with peculation. From eight to twelve o'clock from five to ten combatants were frequently on the floor at a time, interrupting each other and clamoring to be heard.

It was trying to the chairman, and in truth, trying to everybody; but a few seemed to enjoy the trial, as frogs are sometimes said to laugh during the skinning process. For hours the uproar continued. A policeman in frost of the post office heard an unusual noise, sprung his rattle, and called a squad of neighboring police around him. They consulted. Some thought it was a murder. Another wanted to turn the firemen's hose on it. But at last they ventured up the stairs and peeped timidly in. It was halfclamoring to be heard. up the stairs and peeped timidly in. It was half-past 11, and no heads broken yet. Finally mid-night struck. Thirteen persons were standing on the new carpet in a paroxysm of unquencha-ble rage, swinging their wearled arms and each The other chairman the leader of the opposition instantly called upon the frantic crowd to meet in the afternoon at her residence and organize a rival State society. And it was so. The gas was turned out; the voices gradually ceased; the policymen tip-toed away, confounded at the rare performance. To sum up, insults had been freely exchanged, old hostilities had been strengthened, and new animosities had been strengthened, and new animosities had been heaped upon the cause which the combatants had promised to promote, and all to decide whether the desk should go into that corner. If we had time and room to day we should write upon this text a satire upon human life.

PITTSBURG'S SMOKE NUISANCE.

Prevention of Smoke by Perfect Combustion-How Pittsburg Can be Made a Clean The Pittsburg Commercial of Saturday

A practical test is to be made this afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the coke works of Mr. C. H. Armstrong, in the Twelfth ward, for the purpose of demonstrating to those who are skeptical on the subject that the smoke nuisance can be effectually abated in this great and busy and smoking city of ours. Very important results have been achieved, and it is now claimed by Mr. McKenzie, a well-known mechanic, that he has discovered a method of perfect combustion, whereby no smoke is generated. His appliance, therefore, is not strictly a smoke consumer, but a smoke preventer.

A smoke preventer.

His principle of combustion works perfectly with our soft coal, and he is prepared to show to those who will take the trouble to witness his tests, that every particle of smoke issuing from our mills and foundries, our shops and steamboats, can be cheaply and economically prevented. Without entering into details, we may state that the result is attained by means of a forestead in front of the boilers, from furnace placed in front of the boilers, from which the heat or flame is conveyed directly under them. The combustion in this furnace is thorough, and the heat so intense that it could not be applied directly to the boilers. A bar of iron placed in the furnace while in operation will melt away almost like wax, so that it become necessary to lessen the temperature with cold air before the flame passes under the boilers for the generation of steam. This flame is entirely devoid of smoke, and our smokestacks, when this appliance comes into general use, will cease to vomit forth their block pass. their blackness. The furnace is comparatively inexpensive, can be managed by any one, and the economy in fuel would render it desirable. even if there were nothing to gain by getting rid of our greatest nuisance—that nuisance which blackens our houses, blackens our clothing, blackens our persons, and blackens our civic reputation—smoke. But there are other advantages to be gained, not the least of which will be the opportunity to utilize all our slack the furnace consuming the finest coal-dust as readily as lump or nut coal.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Bunn Case.

Court of Quarter Sessions-Judge Parson. This morning counsel representing the prosecu-tion in the case of William M. Bunn, charged with conspiracy to obtain from the city of Philadelphia money by illegal means, presented to the court the affidavit of Charles F. Hartnack, setting forth that the Grand Jury had examined four of the five witnesses endorsed upon the bill, and had treated them in such a manners as to convince them that it was the intention of the Grand Jury to ignore the bill; that they had sent for the remaining witness, Mr. Strang, and after examining him it was believed they would ignore the bill; and therefore the Court was asked to allow an order and therefore the Court was asked to allow an order withdrawing the bill from the further consideration of the present Grand Jury. Counsel said the Court had already heard the merits of this prosecution upon a writ of habeas corpus, and the President Judge had refused to discharge Mr. Bunn, saying it was a matter which should be inquired into by the petit jury, and now the Grand Jury were about petit jury, and now the Grand Jury were about to arrogate to themselves the power of saying that there, was not sufficient in the case to warrant its being sent into Court. In the olden time, when Grand Juries were composed of knights, gentlemen above suspicion, a finding of theirs against the previously expressed decision of the Court rendered them liable to fine and imprisonment.

Judge Paxson said the world had progressed since that time.

Counsel replied that he knew the world had progressed, but he hoped not in such a manner as to shield criminals. In that day, as he had remarked, the Grand Juries were made up of gentlemen who were above suspicion, but now the world had so improved that, upon a few turns of the wheel, a Grand Jury would be drawn having eighteen politicians, who would quickly enough present a pauper for stealing an egg, and would quickly enough protect the political functionary who plundered the public confers. He really did think that, after the Court had upon habeas corpus remanded Mr. Bunn, the action of the Grand Jury in ignoring the bill upon the same facts would be grossly against law.

Judge Paxson said this was a novel application, and, so far as the court was aware, without prece-

Judge Paxson said this was a novel application, and, so far as the court was aware, without prececent. The official proceedings of the Grand Jury were not known to the court, and should not be known. In their official capacity they were responsible neither criminally nor civilly, and while they were in some respect under the control of the court, they were also under its protection, and the court would not inferer anticipate that they intended to violate their caths and consciences. The affidavit violate their oaths and consciences. The affidavit was not permitted to be filed, and the application

The McCloskey Homicide.

Court of Grand Terminer-Judges Paxson and Fin-letter.

A session of Grand Terminer, to continue during A session of Grand Terminer, to continue during the week, was begun this morning.

The case put on trial was that of Samuel Snodgrass, charged with causing the death of the boy Michael McCloskey. The defendant is a respectable man, some fifty years of age, and a drayman by occupation. The deceased was a small boy, who had suffered from a curvature of the spine prior to this occurrence. It appears that about 3 o'clock in the afternoon the child was lying on his face looking down a cellar in Front street, near Bainbridge, and his legs were across the gutter. Snodgrass had a new horse in his dray, and was trying his quality; he and three others driving down the street at pretty good speed, appearing to be racing; Snodgrass was on the side of the street where the little boy was lying, and the wheel of the dray drove over his ansles, fracturing both. The drays stopped upon hearing the child scream; a large crowd collected and Shodgrass asked if the boy was much hurt; the child said, "You are a bad man to drive overfuny legs," and he said, "No, I am not a bad man: it was all accident." Some one in the crowd asked Snodgrass his name, but, without replying, he jumped on his dray and drove rapidly off. The boy was removed to the Pennsylvania Hospital, where he was treated with some success, so that he improved fast, and at his own request was taken home; the removal injured him, and on the 15th of November he died. At the time of our going to press a jury was being selected. Henry Hazlehurst and Moses A. Dropsie, Esqs., appear for the defendant.

-A Syracuse gentleman tells a bit of a story about a friend which amuses members of the about a friend which amuses members of the Grand Army of the Republic. It involves a letter written by that friend to himself, wherein he says:—"I have been for some years engaged in writing up a history of the Dwight family, and supposed I had every Dwight in the laud in it. But the other day I saw that Post Dwight, of Syracuse, of the Grand Army of the Republic had sent out some notices of a military sort lic, had sent out some notices of a military sort to the said army. I write to ask if you know of such a man living there. If so, what is his business? Is Post his whole Christian name?" business? Is Post his whole Christian name?"

—There was a curious scene in a Richmond Court on Wednesday. A man had been convicted of an attempt improperly to influence a trial, and the Judge, in passing sentence upon him, said:—"I owe it to you and others—perhaps more to you than any other—that I am aitting here a Virginia Judge. You elected me to administer the laws of the Commonwealth with an upright and impartial mind, and to keep pure the course of justice in Virginia. I know not how better I can justify your expectation and vindicate the wisdom of your choice, believing you to have offended against the laws of the State, than by imposing upon you the highest penalty of the law—s fine of $500 and the costs."
